The background of the advertisement is a close-up of a car's instrument cluster. A red-handled magnifying glass is positioned over the check engine light, which is illuminated with a yellow glow. The light's icon is a yellow engine with a drop of oil. The dashboard has a black face with white numbers (4, 5, 6) and tick marks. The overall theme is automotive maintenance and diagnostics.

CHECK ENGINE LIGHTS

When a check engine light (CEL) turns on, a diagnostic trouble code (DTC) is often stored in the engine control module (ECM). To set a DTC and activate the CEL, sensor data or process values must exceed a set threshold in the ECM. However, conditions like temperature and system operation must also be met for the CEL to trigger.

DTCs don't directly indicate a faulty part but serve as clues during diagnosis.

CRITERIA AND PIDS

Mode $06 data contains programmed values in the ECM for parameter IDs (PIDs), including minimum, maximum, and sometimes nominal values (MIDs, SIDs, and TIDs). If a sensor's output exceeds these values and conditions are met, a DTC may be set.

CONDITIONS

Even if a PID exceeds a threshold, the CEL may not turn on immediately. For instance, if an oxygen sensor misreads the exhaust gases, a code will be set only after the vehicle reaches closed-loop operation and a specific coolant temperature. These conditions align with monitors that run continuously or when conditions are met.

MONITORS

A monitor is a self-test carried out by a module, such as an emissions monitor, which checks PIDs continuously. Some monitors are non-continuous, only operating under specific conditions or during certain parts of the drive cycle, like the catalyst efficiency, EGR, and EVAP monitors. These tests often involve component actuation or specific conditions.

Most emissions readiness monitors follow a sequence, with the misfire or oxygen heater monitor usually first and the EVAP monitor last, due to its dependency on other tests and specific conditions like ambient temperature.

PUTTING IT ALL TOGETHER

For example, a DTC P0171 indicates a too-lean fuel system. In this case, the misfire, fuel, oxygen sensor heater, and oxygen sensor monitors, along with the catalyst efficiency monitor, are complete. Additional factors, like coolant temperature and closed-loop operation, align with the criteria that exceed the maximum value for fuel trims. The code doesn't pinpoint a specific part but signals the conditions of the fuel trim, requiring further tests to diagnose the issue. It's essential that new sensors meet original equipment specifications. NAPA sensors are designed to maintain the correct values and outputs, preventing the CEL from returning.

NOE 615-451
Audi 2019-09, Volkswagen 2019-06

INTAKE MANIFOLD

Certain Volkswagen and Audi vehicles are fitted with an intake manifold runner system that's prone to failure. A vacuum diaphragm opens the runner flaps by way of a plastic linkage that connects the flap arm to the diaphragm. The linkage often breaks due to thermal damage, carbon obstruction in the path of the runner flaps and the strong spring which normally holds the flaps in the closed position. The result is often rough running and a P2015 DTC. This OE FIX™ manifold is designed to replace the original unit, but features a linkage made of durable cast aluminum for years of long service. To reduce unnecessary expense, the IMRC sensor is not included - the factory sensor can almost always be reused. Gaskets for both the upstream and downstream ends of the manifold are included for a complete repair.

AIR BAG CLOCKSPrING

NOE 525-127
Chrysler 2014-07,
Dodge 2014-07,
Jeep 2018-07

This air bag clockspring matches the fit of an original that is missing or damaged and is designed to restore current to the air bag, horn, and steering wheel-mounted controls on specified vehicles.

Ford 2011-09, 2005-93,
Lincoln 2002-94,
Mazda 2004-94,
Mercury 2003-94

Air conditioning stopped working? It could be as simple as the pressure switch. This replacement A/C transducer switch is the fix for corroded terminals or a broken connector on the original switch. A direct replacement to restore air conditioning.

EVAPORATIVE EMISSIONS SYSTEM LEAK DETECTION PUMP

NOE 310-219
Alfa Romeo 2020-15,

Brakleen®

Maintaining clean brake and disc parts can improve the life of your car's braking system and keep you safe on the roads. Using a brake parts cleaner for cleaning and degreasing is a great way to maximize the performance and increase the longevity of your entire brake system. While there are several non-chlorinated brake cleaners on the market, not all can guarantee the cleaning power and effectiveness you need. CRC Brakleen® offers a non-chlorinated spray cleaner that works like no other. Here's why Brakleen® is the #1 selling brand of brake cleaner worldwide.
